

PREFACE

This issue begins with reflections on Mark Mitchell's new book, The Limits of Liberalism. In our forum, Will R. Jordan, Matthew D. Sandwisch, and Colin Cordner comment on the book followed by a response from Mitchell. In addition, an essay by Jean-Baptiste Lamarche offers a Polanyian account of psychoanalysis. Lyndsay Atnip uses Polanyian concepts to argue that literature not only evokes meaning, but provides knowledge of human realities. Finally, Walter Gulick provides a short discussion identifying three different ways that people talk about emergence.

As always go to www.polanyisociety.org to check the latest developments in the online News and Notes.

Remember, too, that dues for the Society were due last December. If dues are not current, it's never too late to catch up.
